Copyright Notice & Information

OpenWeb is a service and community where anyone can have free access to view and recreate the content viewed on the site for their own purpose with the intention of making a website for personal use.

All code is property of the OpenWeb team.

All code, tutorials, and examples are protected under the CC Attribution-NoDerivatives 4.0 International license. (<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nd/4.0/>)

This license states that copy and redistribute the material in any medium or format for any purpose, even commercially. However, you cannot claim this code as your own. You must attribute credit if you decide to re-use using methods described in the license.

That being said, if you choose to build, add to, remix, and/or transform the original material but still has the same intent and purpose (at OpenWeb's choice and discretion), you cannot republish, attempt to sell, or take credit for the work as your own. The code is still considered property of OpenWeb and can be subject to prosecution for infringement of this license.

OpenWeb was made for users to learn more about web design for their personal use and that is what the website will always be. Thank you for choosing OpenWeb to help design the next generation of web design.

Thanks,
Shaun Loftin, HTML Editor
